For if Mr. Hurley is able to gain be consent of the British Seaman's Union, then our own shipowners and shipbuilders will be able to maintain successful competition upon equal terms with the British marine. It is a fact that some of the leading shipping men of the United States are looking into the future with some anxiety. This, too, notwithstanding the fact that we are certain to have a merchant marine capable of trans-porting all the international com-merce which the United States can secure. And yet, notwithstanding the magnitude of our merchant marine shipping men realize that in addition to ships and to free seas which en-compass the world, something else is necessary if there is to be satisfac-tory development of American ship-
